Age-related alterations in the expression of CD45, CD44, and L-selectin on lymphocytes. In humans, aging is associated with alterations in cellular functions. Lymphocyte function declines with age, and lymphocytes from elderly humans have decreased proliferative responses to mitogens and decreased responsiveness to anti-IgM. We hypothesized that these defects are associated with alterations in the density or activity of the accessory molecules involved in antigen recognition. We used a panel of mAbs to test for age-related alterations in the expression of CD45, CD44, and L-selectin on lymphocytes. Immunofluorescence flow cytometry of peripheral blood mononuclear cells from 10 young and 10 elderly subjects was performed to determine the density of these molecules on lymphocytes. The percentage of CD45+, CD44+, and L-selectin+ cells in lymphocyte preparations was comparable in the young and elderly. When quantitated, the relative mean fluorescence intensity (RMFI) of CD45, CD44, and L-selectin in the elderly was significantly lower than in the young for all cells analyzed. We conclude that there are age-related decreases in the expression of CD45, CD44, and L-selectin on lymphocytes. These age-related changes may partially explain the decreased responsiveness of the lymphocytes from elderly humans.

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. -- One of the most anticipated Dodgers free-agent signings of the offseason didn't work out after all, as outfielder Andre Ethier signed a one-year deal with the Braves on Thursday. The Dodgers were interested in keeping Ethier but had not discussed a contract with the outfielder, who turns 30 on Sept. 7. Ethier and the Braves had agreed to a $23 million, one-year deal, but he had to wait for Braves president John Schuerholz to approve the contract before it could be announced. "This is one of those deals that was done," said Ethier, who began his career with the Dodgers in 2006. "We still have mutual interest, but I have to go to Atlanta. We have to keep talking. I have to go see them and hopefully they can keep talking." Ethier was also considering going to San Francisco, where he would have been reunited with Giants outfielder Hunter Pence. Ethier said the Giants had not discussed a contract and declined to elaborate when asked about his interest in San Francisco. "We'll see,"
